In this Special Report, John Giordano, founder of The National Institute for Holistic Addiction Studies, discusses Trazodone Withdrawal and Detox.

What is Trazodone?

Trazodone is an anti-depressant of the serotonin antagonist and re-uptake inhibitor (SARI) class.

It is thought to increase the activity of one brain chemical, serotonin, which may become unbalanced and cause depression.

Trazadone is used to treat depression. It may also be used for the relief of anxiety disorder, sleeplessness, tension, as well as chronic pain.

What is Trazodone withdrawal?

Trazodone and other selective serotonin re-uptake inhibitors are known to cause varying degrees of withdrawal symptoms in people who quickly stop taking the medication.

This is also the case with other classes of anti-depressants known as selective serotonin re-uptake inhibitors.
inhibitors.

The withdrawal symptoms are sometimes called anti-depressant discontinuation syndrome.

What are Trazodone withdrawal symptoms?

Dizziness, nausea, headaches, unpleasant sensations, vomiting, irritability, and nightmares.

What is Trazodone detox?

The safest way to withdraw from Trazodone is in a substance medical drug detox program.

Medical programs address one's state of health and specific metabolic needs as well as provide necessary nutritional support all of which help to avoid the worst of Trazodone withdrawal symptoms.

This kind of medical drug detox program has been proven safer, faster, and more reliably comfortable than all other systems in current use. Most patients detox safely from Trazodone in about seven days.
Individuals can withdraw from Trazodone on an outpatient basis, but it will normally take at least four weeks.
